

Supporter

Created on Wednesday, 19 June 2013 07:44 - Last Updated on Thursday, 04 July 2013 09:52
Published on Wednesday, 19 June 2013 07:44

Beware! When a llama is uneasy, it spits in the face of its attacker! These robust, unassuming small camels live in the South American Andes. These woolly Andes natives with their big eyes are closely related to camels, even though they do not have the typical humps. Like camels, llamas have lived in the company of man for many thousands of years. In Arnstadt's zoological park the llamas live in a mixed group with Cameroon sheep. Currently we have a stallion and a mare in our care.